

The Wayfinder's Pocket Primer

Player handout — The Ember Age. Everything your character grew up knowing.

Where you live

It is the year 90 AR — After Ruusan. Ninety years ago the Jedi and the Sith annihilated each other, and the galaxy has spent your whole life quietly coming apart: the HoloNet is dead, the Republic is a rumor with marble halls, and travel between stars is the rarest skill alive. Nobody broke the galaxy — everyone just stopped holding it up.

You are wayfinders: part scout, part envoy, part archaeologist. Your crew reopens dead hyperspace lanes one relit beacon at a time — and decides, world by world, what the reconnected galaxy is going to be.

Ten words everyone uses

TERM	MEANING
AR	After Ruusan — the common calendar
the Withering	The long decline your grandparents watched the Awakening	Force-sensitive children being born again, rising for 20 years
wayfinder	You: scout-envoy-archaeologist
rutter	An inherited, annotated route-log — often worth more than the ship
scrip	Sector currency; nobody's credit is good two systems over first-lighting	The fee and the honor for reopening a beacon
the black lanes	Unregistered Hutt routes that never went dark
a posting	A Guild bounty — the one writ that still travels
the Quiet	Deep-rim slang for dead space

Things your character knows in their bones

- Ships are heirlooms. Nothing is manufactured at scale anymore. Your ship is a century old and held together by devotion. Treat every spare part like a family member.
- News arrives months old, by courier packet or swoop racer, already halfway to myth. The swoop season standings are the closest thing to a shared broadcast.
- A fragment is treasure. A holocron shard, a page of a rutter, an unwiped droid core, a living witness — history didn't survive in books. It survives in pieces, and the pieces disagree.
- The Force is a curse word. Most people have never seen it used. Where it's remembered, it's remembered as the thing that burned the old galaxy down — Jedi and Sith are one curse in most mouths. If someone at the table uses it openly, everyone who saw will treat the crew differently until it's dealt with.
- Everyone owes somebody. It's a broke, indebted galaxy — that's why every PC has an Obligation, and why it keeps calling.

The people who want things from you

Six powers are racing to answer "what comes next" — the Provisional Republic (the old flag), the Admiralty (the last navy), the Vigil (keepers of the sealed relics), the Inheritors (whisper-network with forbidden answers), the Lamplighters (the beacon guild, your natural patron), and the Kajidics (the Hutts, who liked the dark just fine). Above the race sit the Bounty Hunters' Guild — closest thing to law — and the Mandalorian clans — the finest soldiers alive. All of them will offer your crew work. Most of the campaign is deciding whose coin you can live with.
